A sociologist who researches even better than the author Elwood I'd say! He does an interesting job with the case he presents. His "Brainwashing" section was not too convincing. Either the cults don't do it or he hasn't discovered the basic psychology of it (though that's not his field).

Freeman has good insights and does a broadly based job of presenting a Biblical position on this matter. His world view is very close to that of the Bible times, and he has had a wide readership. His interpretations of certain texts (eg Ex.20:3-6) would find those who disagree.

A very recent book. Covers the ground of the major current "new" cults. There is repeated reference to the old creeds and to ancient historical theology. Better to have noted how the Scriptures can meet better the needs which the cults apparently meet in individual lives. Not enough contextualization of the Word to meet today's conditions - too much Calvin.
